

Who's funding who? Throwing light on the anti-TFLS field

INTRODUCTION

Trafficking, forced labour, and slavery (henceforth referred to as TFLS), have become a cause célèbre for a panoply of actors in the private and public sector since the turn of the millennium (McGrath and Watson, 2018). However, despite the huge sums of money being allocated to anti-TFLS causes, many much-hyped anti-TFLS interventions have had a dispiritingly small impact on the prevalence of TFLS (Dottridge, 2014, p. 3).

There are many possible explanations for this lack of success. Perhaps too much money is spent on some approaches relative to another approaches – anti-TFLS organisations have complained that the “proportion of anti-trafficking funds allocated to developing criminal justice systems is too great” (Dottridge, 2014, p. 12). Perhaps disaggregating data on anti-TFLS interventions by gender and age would reveal that men are being underserved relative to women and children (Ucnikova, 2014, pp. 148-149). Or perhaps too much money earmarked for anti-TFLS causes is being funnelled towards other purposes (Dottridge, 2014, p. 12).

Such hypotheses seem plausible. However, the current paucity of data makes them unfalsifiable. Opaqueness plagues the field, and, despite calls for an increased focus on data collection (GAATW, 2010, p. 3-4), detailed analyses of anti-TFLS funding have been sparse. Although private-sector funding of anti-TFLS work makes up an increasingly large proportion of total anti-TFLS funding (Hoff, 2014, p. 128; Ucnikova, 2014, pp. 148), there was, as late as 2017, still “no single database of private sector and philanthropic organisations funding of anti-modern slavery interventions” (Idris, 2017, p. 3). And while the US government looms large in the anti-TFLS field (Bunting and Quirk, 2017, pp. 14-15), there have been few in-depth analyses of where US government anti-TFLS funds are going.

Hoping to rectify this opaqueness, this paper scrutinises which grantmakers are giving out the most money towards anti-TFLS causes, and where their grants are going. By throwing light on the inner workings of the anti-TFLS field, I hope to provide a useful resource to anyone interested in the current shape of the anti-TFLS field and illuminate trends that have hitherto gone unnoticed.

METHODOLOGY

Overview and disclaimer

Foundation Directory Online (henceforth FDO) is a database of information concerning grantmakers and the grants they give out. Using this database, I discovered that 14313 “freedom from slavery” grants were given out between January 1st 2003 and October 1st 2020, $1,273,101,869 in all. These grants were given out by 2629 grantmakers to 2217 grantees. I henceforth assume that “freedom from slavery” can be readily equated with the term “anti-TFLS”. This is a simplification. However, the terms “slavery”, “trafficking” and “forced labour” have become increasingly interchangeable in popular discourse, and I believe that my methodology is an acceptable compromise between pragmatism and precision.

I used the FDO database to compile a list of the twenty grantmakers which have donated the most money towards anti-TFLS causes. I then compiled lists of the top grantees that each grantmaker has given the most anti-TFLS money to. I then collected information about each of these top grantees (to make the scope of my research manageable, I only analysed up to ten top grantees for each grantmaker). Finally, I was able to create grantmaker profiles by generalising from these top grantee analyses. These profiles detail, for every grantmaker I have analysed, their tendencies with regards to anti-TFLS grantmaking.

Before I continue, I must include some words of caution.

Firstly, I did not check for inconsistencies between the data I extracted from the FDO database and data that was available on the FDO database but that I did not extract. For instance, when I wanted to analyse the top grantees of the United States Federal Highway Administration, I first drew up a list of the grantmaker’s top ten grantees. It was only after drawing up this list, when I no longer had access to the FDO, that I found that “Texas Department of Transportation” erroneously appeared twice – there had been a data input error in the database itself. I was able to correct this error because it occurred within the data I had extracted. However, I cannot discount the possibility that other duplications or errors might have become apparent had I crosschecked my top grantee lists with other relevant data.

Secondly, my methodology fails to capture the nuance and heterogeneity of anti-TFLS work. Such shortcomings are somewhat unavoidable in nomothetic research – while I could have categorised grantees in a more nuanced way, this would have made it more difficult to draw general conclusions about the anti-TFLS field. I also did not have the time to make detailed idiographic studies of each grantee, useful as that would have been.

Thirdly, I want to warn that my findings should not be transported unthinkingly beyond the scope of the methodology and definitions that I have put forward below. For instance, I have classified certain grantees as “pro-sex work” because they warn against conflating sex work and sex trafficking. However, some of these grantees do not explicitly support the legalisation of sex work. Outside of the context of this paper, the terms I have used have different connotations, and this should be considered.

Finally, while I have checked and rechecked my findings, the sheer scale of my research means I am likely to have made mistakes. I apologise in advance for any inaccuracies.

Top grantee analyses

Basic facts

Certain basic facts about each grantee were already available from the FDO: grantee names; the cities and countries grantees are or were based in; the total amount of anti-TFLS funds particular grantmakers have given grantees; and the total number of anti-TFLS grants particular grantmakers have given grantees. When these facts were missing from the FDO, I tried to fill in absences with information available on the Internet. I also regularised certain inconsistencies – for instance, in the original data that I extracted, grantees were sometimes said to be based in England or Scotland and sometimes said to be based in the United Kingdom, so I changed all mentions of “the United Kingdom” to “England” or “Scotland” (none of the top grantees that I analysed are/were based in Wales or Northern Ireland).

I also found, where I could, an official website for each grantee. If a grantee did not have an official website, I tried to find another relevant website.

Organisational type

All grantees were classified into four groups: governmental (encompassing government departments, intergovernmental organisations, etc.); universities; teaching hospitals; and NGOs (for the purposes of this paper, a broad signifier covering all non-governmental grantees that are neither universities, nor teaching hospitals).

Though it is likely that some businesses receive anti-TFLS grants, none of the top grantees I analysed were businesses. This made “business” a moot organisational category for the purposes of this paper. It is also worth noting that my categorisation of organisations into non-governmental and governmental is less and less salient, as businesses and their respective charitable foundations (McGrath and Mieres, forthcoming) and “humanitarian support services for victims and law enforcement agencies” (Molland, 2015, p. 775) are becoming increasingly inextricable.

Organisational scope

Effective anti-TFLS work often “takes place primarily at a more localized and issue-specific level” (Bunting and Quirk, 2017, p. 9). However, international organisations tend to have the money and resources to market themselves, whereas smaller organisations are likely to lack the resources to effectively pitch for grants. Given that donors often donate money to grantees based on “reputation, perceived impact or demonstrated efficacy” (Newcomb, 2014, p. 153), could it be that international anti-TFLS organisations receive more funding than organisations operating on a national level?

I wanted to assess whether this is the case. I thus classified grantees as either international, in that they operate in more than one country, or national, in that they only operate within one country. Generally, this was clear-cut. One tricky case was that of universities, since research often concerns international topics and has international implications. However, for the sake of simplicity, I have classified universities and other places of research as having a national scope (unless they have conducted direct international anti-TFLS interventions alongside research).

TFLS focus

I wanted to assess the extent to which grantmakers are giving anti-TFLS funds to organisations with a focus on modern trafficking, forced labour and slavery. I thus classified grantees as having either “some” focus on TFLS, an “exclusive” focus on TFLS, or no focus/an unclear focus.

Grantees which do not use the terms “slavery”, “trafficking” or “forced labour” when articulating their mandates (or that fail to use related words such as “slave”, “trafficked victim”, or “forced labourer”) were designated “-”. I also designated “-” organisations that use the aforementioned terms, but in contexts unrelated to modern TFLS – for instance, organisations dealing with wildlife trafficking or drug trafficking (as opposed to human trafficking) were denoted “-”, as were grantees focused on historical slavery as opposed to modern-day slavery. All other grantees were classified as “exclusive” if they only focus on TFLS and as “some” if they tackle TFLS alongside other issues.

Certain types of grantees were difficult to assess. For instance, measuring the TFLS focus of universities was difficult given that most universities do not conduct direct anti-TFLS interventions – rather, many universities will have an indirect impact on anti-TFLS work, through research reports and policy recommendations. I could have defined, a priori, that such research organisations do not have any meaningful TFLS focus. However, I felt that this would have been too restrictive given the huge influence that research and policy reports on TFLS can have on where anti-TFLS funds are allocated (c.f. McGrath and Watson, 2018).

In the end, I decided to note universities as having some TFLS focus if they have a substantial focus on TFLS – for instance, if they have research departments dedicated to TFLS, are affiliated with research networks dedicated to TFLS, or provide specialist training on anti-TFLS issues. This means that it is not sufficient, to be classified as “some”, for a university to merely employ academics or teach students who are conducting anti-TFLS work. This was a way for me to delineate between anti-trafficking work conducted/encouraged by wider university policy from anti-trafficking work conducted by students/faculty independently of the universities they are affiliated with.

I acknowledge that this boundary is imprecise and somewhat arbitrary. However, given that researchers of TFLS can likely be found in every university in the world, such a demarcation was necessary so as not to mark every university as having some TFLS focus.

My methodology may overstate the extent to which certain grantees are involved in “anti-TFLS” activities. Many grantees, in order to attract anti-TFLS funding, will have incorporated anti-TFLS work into their mandates, “[adjusting] their mandates to donor preferences” (Chuang 2015, p. 1554), but this incorporation of anti-TFLS work might only be superficial.

Conversely, the TFLS focus of certain organisations may be understated by my methodology. For instance, IJM is widely known for its anti-TFLS work. However, the organisation is only marked as having “some” TFLS focus by my methodology, because it also works on non-TFLS issues.

It is also worth remembering that, often, the very interventions which are most effective against TFLS “involve actors and organizations that do not self-identify as anti-slavery or anti-trafficking activists” and only become “part of the global anti-slavery cause via a process of creative aggregation” (Bunting and Quirk, 2017, p. 14). Thus, some grantees classified as “-” may do work that does reduce TFLS – however, by my methodology, they cannot be marked as having a TFLS focus if they do not use the terms “slavery”, “forced labour” or “trafficking” when articulating their mandates.

Finally, it is worth noting that the definition of TFLS is nebulous (Kempadoo, 2015) and distinctions between what is TFLS and what is not TFLS are often arbitrary (Brace and O’Connell Davidson, 2018, p. 19). Thus, any attempt to assess whether organisations receiving “freedom from slavery” grants have a TFLS focus will always be contestable. For instance, I could have counted organisations that tackle child marriage as automatically having a TFLS focus. However, unless such grantees have used terms related to “slavery”, “trafficking”, or “forced labour” when describing their mandates, I have not categorised them as having a TFLS focus.

Religious status

Given the outsized influence of Christian activists on the direction of the anti-TFLS field (Grant, 2018), I was interested to see whether certain grantmakers favour religious organisations. Grantees were denoted “yes” if they are explicitly religious (no matter what their religious affiliation). Grantees were denoted “-” if they are not explicitly religious. It is worth noting that organisations that were initially religious but are no longer religious are marked as “-” and not “yes”.

Demographic focus

Perhaps because “adult men are regarded as almost by definition authors of their own destinies, whereas women and children’s grip on their own wills is understood to be already fragile and tenuous [...] readily imagined in the garb of victimhood” (Brace and O’Connell Davidson, 2018, p. 24), organisations that specifically focus on women and children are common in the anti-TFLS field.

I wanted to measure the extent to which grantmakers fund such organisations. I thus made note of which grantees focus on exclusively women, on exclusively children, or on exclusively women and children. Organisations which work with neither women nor children were denoted “-”. Organisations were also denoted “-” if they work with women and/or children but do not exclusively work with women and/or children.

Attitude to sex work

Though labour trafficking has become increasingly prominent in anti-TFLS discourse, sex trafficking was and remains the primary concern of much of the field (Chuang, 2015, p. 1523). The relationship between sex work and sex trafficking is contentious. Many organisations posit that the two are inseparable, with funding calls for anti-trafficking work often conflating the two or decrying sex work as a cause of trafficking (Clancey, Khushrushahi, and Ham, 2014, p. 89). These organisations argue that eradicating TFLS entails “worldwide eradication of prostitution” (Chuang, 2015, p. 1522). They often claim that prostitution is inherently degrading, “regardless of whether it is forced or voluntary” (Sutherland, 2004, p. 141) or that prostitution is so rarely undertaken freely that the best course of action would be to criminalise buying sex. Such stances are heterogenous, but they share a conviction that “human trafficking and prostitution [are] inseparable and [require] a tough criminal justice response” (Grant, 2018, p. 13). I have marked such grantees as “anti”.

Organisations which explicitly support the rights of sex workers, or that affirm that sex work is legitimate, are rarer. This is likely because the Bush government made it a condition of US government funding that grantees “explicitly [oppose] prostitution and sex trafficking” (Kinney, 2006, p. 161). However, such organisations do exist. I have marked these grantees as “pro”. I have also marked as “pro” organisations that, while they may not explicitly affirm sex worker rights, warn against conflating prostitution with trafficking. As with “anti-sex work” organisations, these “pro-sex work” organisations have heterogenous stances towards sex work, but they share “a rights-based response that [differentiates] between sex work and human trafficking” (Grant, 2018, p. 13).

Some organisations explicitly take a neutral position on sex work. I have marked these organisations as “neutral”. However, it is more common for organisations to take an ambiguous or implicit stance towards sex work. Some organisations use language that sensationalises sex work as immoral, but do not explicitly advocate against sex work as an institution. Other organisations neither help sex workers nor warn against conflating sex work with sex trafficking – however, they also do not come out against sex work. Such organisations do not unambiguously fit the categories I have defined above. Thus, for the purposes of this paper, I have marked them “-”. This is unfortunate, as such grantees are worthy of analysis, and would likely skew my general findings significantly if I were able to include them. However, more nuanced categorisation was not possible in the timeframe I had to complete my research.

Finally, evaluating the sex work attitudes of governmental grantees would have been conceptually difficult. Thus, for the purposes of this paper, I have marked governmental grantees as “-” with regards to their attitudes towards sex work.

Systemic ex-ante, short-term ex-post, long-term ex-post

There have been few analyses of “the purposes for which anti-trafficking money has been used [...] what proportions are intended for different purposes, such as law enforcement, prevention or protection/assistance” (Dottridge, 2014, p. 13). I wanted to conduct such an analysis. However, while “law enforcement”, “prevention” and “protection/assistance” are perfectly good categories of analysis, I wanted a more conceptually precise way to map out which anti-TFLS approaches are being funded and which are not. I have thus coined the rubrics “systemic ex-ante”, “short-term ex-post” and “long-term ex-post”.

These rubrics are roughly analogous to “the traditional ‘3 Ps’: prevention interventions, prosecution efforts and protection initiatives” (Newcomb, 2014, p. 157). A systemic ex-ante approach is analogous to prevention, a short-term ex-post approach to prosecution, and a long-term ex-post approach to protection. However, there are some slight conceptual differences, which I will outline below.

Improving the socioeconomic stability of workers decreases their risk of becoming TFLS victims. I have marked organisations that tackle TFLS by improving the socioeconomic stability of potential TFLS victims as having a systemic ex-ante approach to TFLS. Such a rubric covers organisations which facilitate or advocate for a variety of causes: poverty reduction; education; sheltering the homeless; and the rights of migrants, refugees, and workers. What unites them is that they target “the myriad ways that vulnerability to trafficking arises from the structures that undergird global labor markets and labor relations, and [...] frame their fight against worker exploitation (particularly of migrants) as integral to the long-term prevention of trafficking practices” (Chuang 2015, p. 1519).

Such organisations treat TFLS as a systemic issue, in the sense that they situate TFLS within a wider system of exploitation and attempt to counter its root causes as opposed to tackling TFLS itself. Such organisations are also ex-ante in their approach, in the sense that their interventions are preventative – they occur before being trafficked/enslaved/forced into labour takes place.

While awareness campaigns are abundant, and have been posited as preventative measures, they seem to be superficial (Nwogu, 2014, p. 53, p. 59; McGrath and Mieres, forthcoming), and do not attempt to fix the systemic problems that lead to TFLS (Newcomb, 2014, p. 154). While such measures are arguably preventative, I have not counted them as being “systemic ex-ante”.

Under the rubric of short-term ex-post, I have included organisations which advocate for/conduct rescues of TFLS victims, the capture and punishment of traffickers, and monitoring initiatives which aim to spot trafficking. Such an approach treats TFLS as a crime or aberration, “[locating] the root of the problem in individual deviant behavior” (Chuang, 2015, pp. 1519-1520), thus deflecting from systemic solutions (Bunting and Quirk, 2017, p. 20). Organisations taking such an approach present TFLS as “best addressed through individual perpetrator accountability” (Chuang, 2015, p. 1523).

A short-term ex-post approach often includes punitive measures, such as an emphasis on law and order, punishment, and rescue. However, a short-term ex-post approach might also entail the creation of monitoring tools and “spot the signs” initiatives. The defining feature of the approach is that it treats TFLS as “a micro problem that should be fought on a micro-level” (Milivojevic, Moore and Segrave, 2020, p. 23), including. Such an approach is ex-post in the sense that short-term ex-post interventions occur after the instance of being trafficked/enslaved/forced into labour has taken place. However, the approach is also short-term in the sense that it focuses on the precise spatiotemporal moment in which trafficking is thought to be occurring – it does not try to rehabilitate TFLS victims after they are no longer being trafficked.

A long-term ex-post approach comprises services that help to rehabilitate TFLS victims after they are no longer being trafficked. Such services might include physical and mental health therapy, job training, education, skills training, shelter, and legal advice that extends beyond prosecution efforts. Such an approach is long-term in the sense that it aims to help rehabilitate TFLS victims after they are no longer being trafficked. It is ex-post in the sense that long-term ex-post interventions occur after the instance of being trafficked/enslaved/forced into labour has taken place.

The anti-TFLS approaches I have outlined above are neither exhaustive, nor exclusive. Some anti-TFLS grantees may employ all three approaches; other anti-TFLS grantees may employ none, even if they have some focus or an exclusive focus on TFLS.

Generally, organisations conducting direct anti-TFLS interventions could be straightforwardly evaluated with regards to the above approaches. It was more difficult to evaluate grantees which mainly impact anti-TFLS work through research. For such grantees, I was only able to evaluate them if their research papers contained normative elements (e.g., policy recommendations).

Digital tools

The use of digital monitoring tools has become increasingly prominent in the anti-TFLS field. These tools facilitate “possible detection of trafficking and identification and rescue of victims” (Milivojevic, Moore, Segrave, 2020, p. 21), and help firms rid their supply chains of TFLS (or at least help them comply with anti-TFLS regulations) (McGrath and Mieres, forthcoming). If a grantee uses or sells digital tools that fulfil these anti-TFLS purposes (detection, identification, rescue, compliance), I classified them as utilising digital tools.

RESULTS

Appendices

As an addendum to this paper, I have included three appendices. Appendix A comprises an overview of the top twenty anti-TFLS grantmakers: their overall grantmaking, their anti-TFLS grantmaking, their anti-TFLS grantmaking to top grantees, and the other causes they support. Appendix B comprises the grantmaker profiles of every grantmaker I have analysed. Appendix C comprises the top grantee analyses for each grantmaker. These appendices are not for the casual reader, but I hope they will be a useful resource for anti-TFLS organisations, researchers and anyone else interested in the current shape of the anti-TFLS field.

Brief analysis of the field as a whole

- The sheer scale of the anti-TFLS grantmaking of the United States Federal Highway Administration dwarfs that of all the other grantmakers. This is a surprising finding which merits further investigation.
- The biggest anti-TFLS grantmakers are a mix of US government agencies, foundations, and charities. Out of the top twenty grantmakers, US government agencies and departments donated $474,345,030 to anti-TFLS causes, and other grantmakers donated $380,778,369.
- Humanity United and The Freedom Fund have given more than half of their total grantmaking funds to anti-TFLS causes.
- The Oak Foundation, the NoVo Foundation, Comic Relief, the Kendeda Fund, and the Rees-Jones Foundation have given between 5% and 10% of their total grantmaking funds to anti-TFLS causes.
- The Howard G. Buffett Foundation and the Wal-Mart Foundation, Incorporated have given between 1% and 5% of their total grantmaking funds to anti-TFLS causes.
- The Silicon Valley Community Foundation, the National Lottery Community Fund, the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation and all the US government agencies analysed have given less than 1% of their total grantmaking funds to anti-TFLS causes.
- Grantmakers that support anti-TFLS causes commonly also grant money towards grantees focused on human services, health, community and economic development, and human rights.
- My grantmaker profiles are based on my top grantee analyses. Thus, for each grantmaker, the degree to which their total anti-TFLS grantmaking is constituted by their top grantee grantmaking is a measure of the representativeness of my grantmaker profiles. For instance, for the six grantmakers whose top grantee grantmaking constitutes 100% of their total anti-TFLS grantmaking, my grantmaker profiles are completely comprehensive. On the other hand, for the five grantmakers whose top grantee grantmaking constitutes less than 50% of their total anti-TFLS grantmaking, my grantmaker profiles of these grantmakers may not be representative.

Analysis of grantmaker funding tendencies

- Anti-TFLS grantmakers tend to fund mostly NGOs. However, certain grantmakers prefer universities (the United States National Institutes of Health and the United States Department of Health and Human Services), and certain grantmakers have a preference for government departments (the United States Federal Highway Administration).
- Most of the biggest anti-TFLS grantmakers prefer grantees based in the USA. Only four grantmakers favour other countries: the National Lottery Community Fund; Nationale Postcode Loterij; the Freedom Fund (UK); and Comic Relief.
- Most grantmakers favour organisations with some TFLS focus but not an exclusive focus on TFLS. However, there are outliers. Silicon Valley Community Foundation and the Wal-Mart Foundation prefer to fund grantees with an exclusive focus on TFLS, and Humanity United funds as many top grantees with an exclusive focus on TFLS as it funds top grantees with only some focus on TFLS. Interestingly, a small but significant proportion of the top grantees of many grantmakers have no focus or an unclear focus on TFLS. The United States Department of Health and Human Services mostly funds grantees with an unclear focus on TFLS, and the Freedom Fund (UK)'s biggest recipient of anti-TFLS funds is anonymous. This merits further investigation.
- Half of the grantmakers most favour a short-term ex-post approach. Of the other grantmakers:
  - five most favour a long-term ex-post approach
  - one favours systemic ex-ante and long-term ex-post approaches equally (preferring them over a short-term ex-post approach)
  - four favour a systemic ex-ante approach.
- Slightly more grantmakers prefer funding organisations with an international scope over organisations with a national scope (twelve grantmakers versus eight).
- The majority of grantmakers donate more money to anti-sex work organisations than pro-sex work organisations (twelve), with four grantmakers donating more money to pro-sex work organisations than anti-sex work organisations.
- The majority of grantmakers (thirteen in total) fund, amongst their top grantees, at least one organisation that focuses on exclusively women and/or children. For three grantmakers, such organisations make up half of their top grantees (the NoVo Foundation, Comic Relief, and the Silicon Valley Community Foundation).
- Eleven grantmakers have funded, amongst their top grantees, at least one organisation that uses or sells digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools – a slight majority.
- Twelve grantmakers have funded, amongst their top grantees, at least one explicitly religious organisation – again, a slight majority.

CONCLUSION

I do not have space in this paper to contextualise all these findings, but a useful framework for understanding many of them is to understand that the anti-TFLS field is “notoriously complicated and overcrowded” (Chuang, 2015, p. 1518). Therefore, anti-TFLS grantees must become adept at attracting donor funding to survive. Since “funding processes hijack the accountability mechanisms and re-orient them towards Northern donors” (INTRAC, 2004, p. 3), anti-TFLS organisations must craft their mandates based on “strategic calculations about what will garner interest amongst potential activists, donors, publications, social media sites and policy makers” (McGrath and Mieres, forthcoming).

This incentive for anti-TFLS NGOs to conform to donor preferences explains many of the above trends. For instance, a “funder preference for projects that yield dramatic (and quick) results” (Chuang 2015, p. 1553) might explain the relative paucity of grantmakers that favour a systemic ex-ante approach to TFLS. Preventative approaches, including a systemic ex-ante approach, “[tend] to be less marketable, more expensive, and less able to generate easily measurable impacts than punitive approaches” (Molland, 2015, p. 772). On the other hand, short-term ex-post approaches which employ “a superficial narrative of good (victims) and evil (enslavers)” (Chuang, 2015, p. 1519) and long-term ex-post approaches which give “increasing visibility to victims [...] beneficial for funding and advocacy purposes” (Molland, 2015, p. 772) are both more easily marketable.

This logic can be used to examine most of the above trends. The need for financially expedient narratives which “fit societal notions of the “iconic victim”” (Chuang, 2015, p. 1522) might explain why grantees that are exclusively focused on women and children are so popular; the need to counter “donor fatigue” (Molland, p. 779) in the anti-TFLS field might explain the current fervour for “innovative” digital tools (McGrath and Mieres, forthcoming); and the large amount of duplication seen in my findings, with International Justice Mission appearing in six separate “top grantee” lists, may reflect an undesirable tendency amongst anti-TFLS grantmakers to “[increase] the capacity of only a select group of organisations that may, in fact, be more successful at marketing and far less successful at actually ending trafficking” (Newcomb, 2014, p. 153). Overall, it seems that the most easily marketable anti-TFLS grantees are the ones receiving the most funding.

Such general trends are disheartening. An overemphasis on short-term ex-post approaches fails to tackle the root causes of TFLS, which often “[takes] place in the context of more widespread, and often normalised, labour rights abuses” (Varia, 2014, p. 169), and the commonplace conflation of sex work and sex trafficking has had a demonstrably negative impact on sex workers, whose livelihoods are often disrupted under the guise of anti-TFLS work (Shih, 2017, p. 784). The general preference of grantmakers for international organisations also bodes badly for smaller anti-TFLS organisations, who often struggle to meet their financial needs (Nwogu, 2014; Surtees and de Kerchove, 2014). Soberingly, it seems that anti-TFLS work has generally moved away from “securing long-term well-being through poverty-reduction strategies” to “a zeal for the immediateness of saving lives” (Molland, 2015, p. 765). My findings are unsurprising given that the policy field has been critiqued as “sensationalist, self-serving, and superficial” (Bunting and Quirk, 2017, p. 28).

However, despite the disconcerting general trends I have found, there are individual grantmakers who seem to be taking a more holistic approach – grantmakers that are investing into systemic ex-ante work, warning against the conflation of sex work and TFLS, and helping to fund smaller organisations. Such grantmakers should not be viewed as inherently, uncomplicatedly good – for instance, while systemic ex-ante measures (such as a focus on economic development) are more holistic than short-term ex-post measures, a development paradigm can still perpetuate pre-existing power dynamics (McGrath and Watson, 2018). However, these outlier grantmakers do, at the very least, show that it is possible for grantmakers to prioritise thoughtfulness over sensationalism.

This article has not investigated how anti-trafficking funding has changed over time. However, this would not be unreasonably difficult – my methodological analysis would only need to be applied to multiple time periods, which could then be compared. Further research could also use the data I have collected to investigate specific hypotheses – for instance whether private foundations have different funding tendencies compared to governments (c.f. Hoff, 2014, p. 127; c.f. Surtees and de Kerchove, 2014, p. 81), or to assess whether foundations are “moving from one-off projects (which are what donors typically fund) to a programme with long-term interventions” (Ellinger and Sharma, 2014, p. 173).

What is clear is that more research is necessary. The US government continues to have an underexamined role in the direction of the anti-TFLS field; and the social cachet and huge wealth of elites and their respective philanthropic organisations, which gives them unprecedented power over which anti-trafficking organisations get funded and which do not, has allowed philanthropists to “monopolize the market of ideas” (Chuang 2015, p. 1529). If we are to get better at fighting TFLS, we must understand what we are already doing – or, in other words, who’s funding who?

APPENDIX B: GRANTMAKER PROFILES

United States Federal Highway Administration

- All their top grantees are based in the USA.
- Their top grantees are all governmental. All but one of their top grantees are Departments of Transportation – the outlier, “District of Columbia, Government Of”, is a government department, as opposed to a department of transportation.
- All their top grantees operate on a national scope.
- All their top grantees have some focus on TFLS, though none of them are exclusively anti-TFLS organisations.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.
- None of their top grantees are exclusively focused on the welfare of women and/or children.
- All their top grantees are governmental – I have thus not evaluated their attitudes to sex work, as per my methodology.
- Out of their top grantees, only “District of Columbia, Government Of” has short-term ex-post, systemic ex-ante and long-term ex-post policies towards TFLS. All their other grantees exclusively take a short-term ex-post approach to trafficking. Thus, the grantmaker has disproportionately funded a short-term ex-post approach. $189,986,780 has gone towards top grantees that take a short-term ex-post approach to TFLS, $20,605,993 has gone towards top grantees that take a systemic ex-ante approach to TFLS, and $20,605,993 has gone towards top grantees that take a long-term ex-post approach to TFLS.
- No organisations which use or sell digital monitoring tools to fight TFLS are amongst their top grantees.

United States National Institutes of Health

- All their top grantees are based in the USA.
- Most of their top grantees are prestigious universities. The two top grantees that do not fit into this category are “Medical College of Wisconsin, Inc., The” (a medical college) and “Brigham and Women's Hospital” (a teaching hospital). These medical, non-university organisations receive much less overall funding ($5,058,378) than the universities receive ($31,277,311). One could say broadly that all the grantees have a focus on education of some kind.
- All their top grantees have a national scope.
- Six top grantees have some focus on TFLS. Four of them have no or an unclear focus.
- The grantmaker supports one explicitly religious top grantee, which receives a small but significant proportion of its anti-slavery grants ($2,878,554).
- None of their top grantees are exclusively focused on the welfare of women and/or children.

- None of the grantees have explicitly stated any position on sex work.
- The grantmaker seems to favour funding organisations pursuing long-term ex-post approaches ($17,431,802), with organisations pursuing short-term ex-post ($9,270,381) and systemic ex-ante approaches ($8,733,787) getting fewer anti-TFLS funds.
- None of their top grantees are organisations which use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

Oak Foundation

- Oak Foundation has funded top grantees from heterogenous geographical locations. Organisations based in the USA have received the most funds ($28,459,166), but top grantees based elsewhere have also received significant amounts of funding. $8,585,899 has gone to a Serbian grantee, $4,201,497 to a Thai grantee, $3,144,077 to two English grantees, $2,340,000 to a Nicaraguan grantee, $1,223,955 to a Swiss grantee, and $1,200,000 to a Guatemalan grantee.
- All but one of their top grantees are definitely NGOs (there is not enough information available about “Project Counselling Service for Latin American Refugees” to evaluate its organisational type).
- The foundation gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($45,631,389) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($2,323,205).
- The majority of top grantees (six) have some focus on TFLS. Two top grantees exclusively focus on TFLS, and two have no focus or an unclear focus on TFLS.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.
- A significant proportion of the foundation’s grants are towards three top grantees that are exclusively focused on the welfare of children, with $13,046,324 going towards these organisations. One top grantee is an exclusively women-focused organisation, receiving $2,340,000.
- The foundation seems to have an overall “pro-sex work attitude”, with three of their top grantees being explicitly pro-sex work, receiving $25,223,121 in total. However, it is important to note that the foundation also funds organisations with policies that may harm sex workers, even if they are not explicitly anti-sex work – for instance, Thorn’s mass surveillance of escort ads (Taylor, 2019).
- The foundation mostly funds organisations taking a systemic ex-ante approach to TFLS ($32,669,445 going towards such organisations), with slightly less funding of long-term ex-post approaches ($30,228,695) and of short-term ex-post approaches ($24,517,805).
- The foundation has granted $11,001,497 to two top grantees which use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

Humanity United

- Most of Humanity United’s top grantees are US organisations ($25,372,419), with only one top grantee based in another country (an English grantee which has received $3,977,540).
- Their top grantees are all NGOs.
- Humanity United gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($27,744,234) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($1,605,725).
- Five top grantees have some focus on TFLS, and five top grantees exclusively focus on TFLS.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.
- A small proportion of Humanity United’s anti-slavery grants were given to an organisation that exclusively focuses on the welfare of children. This organisation received $3,526,778.
- One of Humanity United’s top grantees takes a pro-sex work approach (receiving $1,605,725) but two other top grantees take an anti-sex work approach (receiving $3,826,500 in total).
- Humanity United gives more of its grants to organisations that pursue a short-term ex-post approach ($27,674,959) than to organisations pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($22,906,811) or a long-term ex-post approach ($19,797,043).
- Humanity United has granted $5,061,768 to two top grantees which use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

NoVo Foundation

- Most of Novo Foundation’s top grantees are US organisations (which received $29,144,843 in total), but one of its top grantees is based in India (receiving $4,235,000) and another is in South Africa (receiving $1,505,000)
- Their top grantees are all NGOs.
- NoVo Foundation gave more overall funding to top grantees operating on a national scope ($19,902,500) than it gave to top grantees operating on an international scope ($14,982,343).
- Six top grantees have some focus on TFLS, and four top grantees exclusively focus on TFLS.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.
- Five top grantees (out of ten analysed) exclusively focused on the welfare of women. This suggests that NoVo Foundation places a strong emphasis on the welfare of women. These organisations received $17,161,652.
- The vast majority of NoVo Foundation’s top grantees (eight out of ten) take an anti-sex work view – more specifically, they all explicitly support the Nordic or equality model. The foundation thus donated $29,554,843 towards “anti-sex work” organisations.
- All of NoVo Foundation’s top grantees pursue a short-term ex-post approach (receiving $34,884,843 in total). Organisations pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($24,421,843) or pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($19,465,691) were granted less.

- NoVo Foundation granted $7,710,691 to one top grantee which uses/sells digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools. This grantee received the most funds of any individual grantee.

United States Agency for International Development

- Half of the US Agency for International Development's top grantees are US organisations (which received $22,869,386 in total). The other five top grantees are from Thailand ($7,028,920), Afghanistan ($1,483,950), Guatemala ($750,000), Uzbekistan ($263,070), and Austria ($210,000).
- Eight of the agency's top grantees are NGOs, receiving $27,095,326 in total, while the other three are inter-governmental organisations, receiving $5,510,000.
- The agency gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($30,108,306) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($2,497,020).
- Eight top grantees have some focus on TFLS, one has an exclusive focus on TFLS, and one has no focus/an unclear focus on TFLS.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.
- Two of the agency's top grantees (out of ten analysed) exclusively focused on the welfare of children, receiving $1,013,070.
- None of the agency's top grantees take a clear position on sex work.
- The agency gave slightly more funding to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($28,718,326), than to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($27,968,326) or a short-term ex-post approach ($26,484,376).
- The agency granted $11,138,920 to three top grantees which use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools, indicating a significant proportion of their total anti-TFLS funding.

Comic Relief

- Eight of Comic Relief's top grantees are English organisations (which received $12,923,704 in total). The other two top grantees are from Ethiopia ($1,563,127), and the Netherlands ($1,180,748).
- All of Comic Relief's top grantees are NGOs.
- Comic Relief gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($14,785,042) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($882,537).
- Five top grantees have some focus on TFLS, three top grantees exclusively focus on TFLS, and two have no or an unclear focus on TFLS.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.

- Half of Comic Relief's top grantees (out of ten analysed) exclusively focused on the welfare of children and/or women. The organisation granted $882,537 towards exclusively women-focused organisations, $2,765,232 towards exclusively children-focused organisations and $2,845,853 towards organisations focused exclusively on women and children.
- One of Comic Relief's top grantees takes a clear pro-sex work position (Anti-Slavery International). It receives the most funding of any top grantee ($4,365,666).
- Comic Relief gave slightly more funding to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($11,103,449), than to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($10,772,869) or a short-term ex-post approach ($10,510,447).
- Comic Relief granted $1,169,196 to one top grantee which uses or sells digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

United States Department of State

- Out of the ten top grantees analysed, the six which receive the most funding from Department of State are from the USA, and seven in all are from the USA. These seven top grantees from the USA receive $22,640,000 overall. The other three top grantees are from Thailand (receiving $1,243,000), England ($1,201,509), and Malawi ($840,216).
- All but one of the DoS's top grantees are NGOs, receiving $20,294,725. The other top grantee is governmental – specifically, an inter-governmental organisation, which receives $5,630,000.
- The DoS gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($23,084,509) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($2,840,216).
- Six top grantees have some focus on TFLS, three top grantees exclusively focus on TFLS, and one, the Lilongwe Wildlife Trust, has no focus on human TFLS, (although it is focused on wildlife trafficking).
- Two of their top grantees are explicitly religious, receiving $10,950,000, a significant proportion of funding.
- Two of the DoS's top grantees exclusively focus on the welfare of children, receiving $3,050,000.
- The DoS gave $9,500,000 towards a grantee that takes an explicitly anti-sex work approach, and $1,201,509 towards a grantee that takes an explicitly pro-sex work approach.
- The DoS gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($24,334,509), than to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($15,584,509) or a long-term ex-post approach (also $15,584,509).
- Three of the DoS's top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools, receiving $8,123,000 in total.

United States Office of Justice Programs

- All top grantees of the United States Office of Justice Programs are based in the USA.

- All but one of the Office of Justice Programs' top grantees are NGOs, which have received $12,173,915. The other top grantee is a governmental county, the County of Riverside in California, which has received $900,000.
- The Office of Justice Programs gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on a national scope ($11,598,919) than it gave to top grantees operating on an international scope ($1,474,996).
- Eight top grantees have some focus on TFLS, one top grantee exclusively focuses on TFLS, and one has no or an unclear focus on TFLS.
- Two of their top grantees are explicitly religious and have received $1,848,921 in total.
- None of the Office of Justice Programs' top grantees exclusively focused on the welfare of children, or of women, or of both.
- The Office of Justice Programs has granted $1,950,000 towards a grantee taking an explicitly pro-sex work stance and $1,675,000 towards a grantee that explicitly takes a neutral position on sex work.
- The Office of Justice Programs gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($13,073,915), than to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($9,574,994) or a short-term ex-post approach ($9,048,917).
- None of the Office of Justice Programs' top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

United States Department of Health and Human Services

- All top grantees of the United States Department of Health and Human Services are based in the USA.
- Six of the department's top grantees are universities, which have received $12,276,815, with the other four being NGO's, receiving $4,812,472.
- The department gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on a national scope ($14,404,287) than it gave to top grantees operating on an international scope ($2,685,000).
- Three top grantees have some focus on TFLS, one top grantee exclusively focuses on TFLS, and the rest have no or an unclear focus on TFLS.
- One of their top grantees is explicitly religious and has received $1,500,666.
- None of their top grantees exclusively focus on the welfare of children, or of women, or of both.
- The department has granted $1,800,000 towards one grantee that takes an explicitly anti-sex work stance.
- The department gave the same amount of funding to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($3,885,000) as to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($3,885,000). Organisations pursuing a short-term ex-post approach received fewer grants overall ($2,685,000).
- One of the department's top grantees uses or sells digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools. It has received $1,800,000.

Howard G. Buffett Foundation

- All their top grantees are based in the USA.
- I have classified all their top grantees as NGOs, although both “Arizona State University Foundation” and “McCain Institute for International Leadership at Arizona State University” are affiliated with Arizona State University.
- All top grantees are organisations with an international scope.
- All top grantees had some focus on trafficking (but not an exclusive focus).
- Only one of their top grantees is explicitly religious (IJM), receiving $2,822,421. I have not classified Invisible Children as religious, although it was, at the time of its founding, religious.
- None of their top grantees exclusively focus on the welfare of children, or of women, or of both. Despite Invisible Children’s name, it does not work exclusively with children, and so cannot be said to have an exclusive demographic focus.
- The foundation has granted $2,822,421 towards one grantee that takes an explicitly anti-sex work stance.
- The department gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($27,249,256) than top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($25,266,008), or a long-term ex-post approach ($839,173).
- None of their top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

The Freedom Fund (UK)

- Eight of the ten top grantees analysed are based in India (receiving $8,455,064 in total) with the two other top grantees based in the USA (receiving $665,000) and England (receiving $535,954). Notably, the grantee earning the most funds is an ‘Anonymous Recipient’ – little information is given about them other than that they are based in India.
- All but one of their top grantees are NGOs. The organisational type of “Anonymous Recipient” is unclear.
- The Freedom Fund (UK) gave much more overall funding to top grantees explicitly operating on a national scope ($6,974,856) than it gave to top grantees explicitly operating on an international scope ($654,854). The scope of “Anonymous Recipient” is unclear.
- Out of their top grantees, eight had some TFLS focus, one had an exclusive focus on TFLS, and one had no or an unclear focus.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.
- The Freedom Fund granted $1,213,240 towards one exclusively children-focused organisations, and $1,126,984 towards two organisations that focus on exclusively “women and children”.
- The Freedom Fund has granted $594,793 towards one grantee that takes an explicitly anti-sex work stance.
- The Freedom Fund gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($7,052,649) compared to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($6,387,649), or a long-term ex-post approach ($5,851,695).
- One of the Freedom Fund’s grantees uses or sells digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools. It received $1,213,240.

The Kendeda Fund

- All their top grantees are based in the USA.
- All their top grantees are NGOs.
- All their top grantees operate on an international scope.
- All their top grantees had some (but not an exclusive) TFLS focus.
- One of their top grantees is explicitly religious. Notably, this is the grantees that, by a significant amount, receives the most funding, receiving $9,846,000 in total.
- The Kendeda Fund has granted $2,030,000 towards two exclusively women-focused organisations.
- The Kendeda Fund has granted $15,842,458 towards two grantees that takes an explicitly pro-sex work stance. Notably, these are the two grantees that receive the most funding.
- The Kendeda Fund gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($18,872,458) compared to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($15,972,458), or a short-term ex-post approach ($0).
- None of their top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

Silicon Valley Community Foundation

- Eight of the ten top grantees are based in the USA (receiving $15,900,160 in total) with the other two top grantees based in the Philippines (receiving $656,811) and England (receiving $525,000).
- Nearly all their top grantees are NGOs, receiving $16,606,971, other than Massachusetts General Hospital, which is a teaching hospital affiliated with Harvard Medical School (receiving $475,000).
- The foundation gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($15,950,160) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($1,131,811).
- Six top grantees had an exclusive TFLS focus, and four had some focus on TFLS.
- One of their top grantees is explicitly religious, receiving $1,057,750.
- The foundation has granted $900,000 towards two exclusively women-focused organisations, $9,382,525 towards two exclusively children-focused organisations, and $656,811 towards one organisation that focuses exclusively on women and children. All in all, five out of their ten top grantees focus on women, or children, or both.
- The foundation has granted $2,523,433 towards two grantees that takes an explicitly anti-sex work stance.
- The foundation gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($13,694,321) than to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($7,986,221), or a long-term ex-post approach ($7,936,221).

- Two of their top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools, receiving $9,028,683.

Nationale Postcode Loterij

- Three of the six top grantees are based in the Netherlands (receiving $6,164,494 in total) with two other top grantees based in England (receiving $1,219,001) and Thailand (receiving $695,256). It is unclear where one grantee, “Terre des Hommes”, is based, as the relevant data was missing in the FDO. In my analysis henceforth, I have assumed that “Terre Des Hommes” refers to the Terre Des Hommes Federation. If this is indeed the case, the Federation’s International Secretariat is based in Geneva.
- Their top grantees are all NGOs.
- The grantmaker gave much more overall funding to top grantees explicitly operating on an international scope ($14,133,486) than it gave to top grantees explicitly operating on a national scope ($1,218,701).
- Four top grantees have some TFLS focus, and two have an exclusive focus on TFLS.
- None of their top grantees are explicitly religious.
- The foundation has granted $1,219,001 towards exclusively women-focused organisations and $12,914,485 towards exclusively children-focused organisations, indicating a particular focus on the welfare of children.
- None of the grantees appear to have an explicit sex work stance.
- The grantmaker gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($14,133,486) than to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($14,133,186), or a short-term ex-post approach ($8,523,693).
- There are no top grantees that use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

United States Department of Justice

- All their top grantees are based in the USA.
- Nearly all their top grantees are NGOs, receiving $8,150,000, other than two governmental grantees, “Seattle, City Of” and “Saint Louis, County of”, which received $1,494,989 in total.
- The DoJ gave more overall funding to top grantees operating on a national scope ($5,744,989) than it gave to top grantees operating on an international scope ($3,900,000).
- One top grantee had an exclusive TFLS focus, eight had some focus on TFLS, and one had no focus or an unclear focus.
- Two of their top grantees are explicitly religious, receiving $2,400,000 from the DoJ in total.
- None of their top grantees are focused on exclusively woman, children, or both.

- The DoJ has granted $2,400,000 towards two grantees that take an explicitly anti-sex work stance, and $1,250,000 to one grantee taking an explicitly pro-sex work stance.
- The DoJ gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($8,900,000) compared to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($6,800,000), or a systemic ex-ante approach ($5,750,000).
- None of their top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

The Rees-Jones Foundation

- All their top grantees are based in the USA. The grantee receiving the most funding, IJM, dwarfs the other grantees in terms of funding, receiving more than a hundred times more funding than the second-largest grantee.
- All their top grantees are NGOs.
- The Rees-Jones Foundation gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($13,866,775) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($95,000).
- Two top grantees have an exclusive TFLS focus, and three have some focus on TFLS.
- One of their top grantees is explicitly religious, receiving $13,656,775.
- The foundation has granted $110,000 towards one exclusively women-focused organisations.
- The foundation has granted $13,656,775 towards one grantee that takes an explicitly anti-sex work stance.
- The foundation gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($13,756,775) compared to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($205,000), or a systemic ex-ante approach ($125,000).
- None of their top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

The Wal-Mart Foundation, Inc.

- All their top grantees are based in the USA.
- All their top grantees are NGOs.
- The foundation gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on an international scope ($10,762,259) than it gave to top grantees operating on a national scope ($946,225).
- Four top grantees have an exclusive TFLS focus, and two have some focus on TFLS.
- Three of their top grantees are explicitly religious (half of the total top grantees), receiving $3,652,441 in total.
- None of their top grantees are focused on exclusively woman, children, or both.
- The foundation granted $6,636,441 towards three grantees that take an explicitly anti-sex work stance.

- The foundation gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($11,678,484) compared to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($8,057,043), or a long-term ex-post approach ($7,170,818).
- Two of their top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools, receiving $7,139,818.

The National Lottery Community Fund

- Nine of the ten top grantees are based in England (receiving $7,659,163 in total) with the other grantee based in Scotland (receiving $1,058,614).
- All their top grantees are NGOs.
- The fund gave much more overall funding to top grantees operating on a national scope ($7,955,720) than it gave to top grantees operating on an international scope ($762,057).
- Two top grantees have an exclusive TFLS focus, seven have some focus on TFLS, and one has no focus or an unclear focus.
- Four (out of ten) of their top grantees are explicitly religious (a high proportion compared to the other grantmakers analysed). These grantees have received $3,844,142.
- The fund has granted $3,567,697 towards four exclusively women-focused organisations.
- The Fund has granted $983,429 towards one grantee that takes an explicitly anti-sex work stance.
- The fund gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a long-term ex-post approach ($7,956,462) compared to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($3,272,796), or a short-term ex-post approach ($2,828,763).
- None of their top grantees use or sell digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools.

Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation

- All but one of their top grantees are based in the USA (receiving $10,033,224 in total). One grantee is based in England (receiving $1,500,000).
- All their top grantees are NGOs.
- The foundation gave much more overall funding to top grantees explicitly operating on an international scope ($8,759,483) than it gave to top grantees explicitly operating on a national scope ($2,773,741).
- Five top grantees have some TFLS focus, one has an exclusive focus on TFLS, and two have no or an unclear focus on TFLS.
- One of their top grantees is explicitly religious (IJM) receiving $5,005,000.
- The foundation has granted $1,902,846 towards two exclusively women-focused organisations.
- The foundation has granted $5,008,750 towards two grantees that takes an explicitly anti-sex work stance.

- The foundation gave more funding to top grantees pursuing a short-term ex-post approach ($6,102,887) compared to top grantees pursuing a systemic ex-ante approach ($3,754,483), or a long-term ex-post approach ($1,157,087).
- One of their top grantees uses or sells digital anti-TFLS monitoring tools, receiving $3750.
