

Global mobility in a sustainable world

As global organisations continue to tread in the residual ripples of the COVID-19 pandemic, the idea of the workplace is continually evolving both within and across borders. The pandemic has rapidly accelerated the availability of hybrid and remote working on a massive scale, making it more commonplace than ever. As employers look to fill roles during a skills shortage, the wider range of work arrangements have allowed organisations to think more globally in the pursuit of talent.

Despite the benefits of remote and hybrid work, however, they bring with them a number of organisational and compliance challenges to overcome. Global organisations will need to actively consider their management tools and engagement strategies, whilst also balancing the personal, health, well-being, and business needs of their employees. New global policies and systems will be required for organisations to attract and support their employees whilst delivering the outcomes required for their business and ensuring compliance with the ever-changing relevant laws and regulations.

Join us for our latest webinar on the Future of Mobility in which our Global Employer Services, IT and Legal specialists will explore these critical issues, and the risks and opportunities on the horizon, whilst sharing their experiences of best practice globally.

The previous two years have forced organisations to act reactively to a wildly unpredictable global landscape. Now, as the fog begins to clear, companies have the opportunity to lead the changes that they want to implement towards a sustainable future.

We hope you can join us.
