

Laidlaw Scholars Programme
Leadership-in-Action Review

Week 3

Angel Wu (2023 Laidlaw Scholar)

The University of Hong Kong

Week 3: 5 June – 11 June

Progress and achievements:

Conducted literature review of relevant studies and reports done by local and international human rights organizations on the topic in English. Reviewed the cases handled by the organization to understand the issues better. Refined the interview questions under such context.

Difficulties and challenges:

It was a long process to find and read all relevant literature already done and published by other organizations on related topics. Nonetheless, it was necessary and was done by focusing the time to complete this before continuing the study.

Room for Improvement:

Thorough literature review should have been done at the beginning of the study, not the middle of the study. Further, it would be more effective if I had been able to review Arabic literature on the topic as well. Nonetheless, it is not possible at this stage.

Self-Reflection:

In order to amend the mistake made in the previous week, I dedicated time to make sure I am on the right path. This is an important indicator to correct a mistake and not be discouraged by it.

Leadership:

To be successful, especially as a leader, one must be well prepared and knowledgeable in the field. Only then, can issues be accurately identified and properly addressed. A leader should be always seeking to learn and understand the situation of others.
